

Sabrina Posillico's pregnancy might have cramped her calves, but not her style. The baby bump hardly interfered with the model's wardrobe. The severely chic Posillico never looked out-of-sorts during the nine months. Posillico is the first to be featured in a new series called "In The Bag," articles that look into the contents of various women's handbags around the Valley. She's traded in the Chanel 2.55 for a Dolce and Gabbana purse that doubles as a diaper bag—it's called being fashionably-flexible. We chat with Posillico about her handbag and the items she carries with. . .

Who makes the bag?

Dolce & Gabbana. Love it because it goes with everything and doubles as my diaper bag.

Walk me through the items in the bag.

I carry four things in my bag. I like things orderly plus it's easy to switch bags. Lodi's wallet, Tom Ford sunglasses, iPhone, black bag with face mist, mini mascara and eyeliner, lip tint, lip balm, calendula salve, hair tie, mini glass nail file and a mini sewing kit for those wardrobe malfunctions.

When it comes to shopping for handbags, where do you buy from?

Neiman Marcus, Saks and Nordstrom are the best place for bags.

What do you look for in a bag?

I love all types of bags from classic Chanel to clutches. Lately though I've only bought cross-body styles because I like to have my hands-free.

You can never leave the house without (_____)?

I can never leave the house without sunglasses and my face mist.

Most shocking item in your handbag?

The most shocking thing in my bag these days are breast pads!
