Where Larry the Cable Guy will soon call home.

The famous guy known as “Larry the Cable Guy” has performed in the Phoenix area, including his most recent appearance with Jeff Foxworthy. Well, now he’ll be calling the Valley home, because the guy whose real name is Daniel Whitney, bought a sprawling mansion in Scottsdale.

The famous comedian and TV actor is known for being part of the Blue Collar Comedy Tour, the popular comedy troupe that included Bill Engvall, Ron White, and Jeff Foxworthy with whom he also starred on Blue Collar TV.

The Scottsdale property sits on the magnificent Desert Mountain golf course community. The comedian and his wife Cara, paid $3.6 million for the estate which boasts a 4,000 square foot home with four bedrooms and walls of glass. The master suite has a stunning marble bath and there are also two sumptuous guest suites and a guest casita.

Of course, the finest of finishes have been used throughout the abode. Daniel and his wife and family and friends can entertain with their four fireplaces, wrap around patio with an amazing outdoor kitchen with a fire pit. The home also features a Savant system, security cameras, air conditioned garage and a lot more luxuries.

Daniel and wife Cara bought the home from Calgary businessman Bill Gallacher who owns the Portland Winterhawks hockey team. The Whitney's new views? They're 180 degrees of the city below, the sunsets, mountains and the Cochise Geronimo driving range

Daniel and Cara - welcome to Scottsdale!
