Kukui'ula is an uncommon community – a luxurious private club with an open Hawaiian heart. On 1,000 acres of joy overlooking the Pacific on Kauai's south shore, Kukui'ula is the islands' most significant new residential community in decades.

The Club Cottages, Kukui'ula's newest property offering, combine island ease with Kauai's deep-rooted respect for the environment. Located beside Plantation House, the clubhouse that is the center of the community at Kukui'ula, the cottages put owners at the heart of it all. Drinks and dinner on the club lanai, a lazy afternoon by the pool, or fun in the keiki room and game room are literally steps away. The superbly outfitted Golf Clubhouse is across the street, and the Spa at Kukui'ula, one of the island's most stylish and irresistible wellness centers, is your next door neighbor.

Better yet, the Club Cottages are candidates for LEED certification – which means they've been designed, constructed, third-party inspected and performance-tested to perform better than conventional homes. "LEED, Leadership in Energy and Environmental design, is a standard recognized across North America," says Brent Herrington, president of the Kukui'ula development company. "We live in an extraordinary environment, and we're proud that the Club Cottages are being designed to meet LEED standards."

Club Cottages are designed in the authentic plantation style architecture characterized by split pitched roofs, generous covered lanai and seamless indoor/outdoor living. And they're designed to make island life easy: The only decisions you need to make are whether to add a guest cottage or garage, and if you'd like to have the Parrish Collection furnish and manage your home.

At Kukui'ula, being green is as easy as coming home to a Club Cottage of your own.
