Southwestern Eye Center Comes to Tucson

Written by Ashley Pearlstein

Southwestern Eye Center, a well-respected and established eye care business in Mesa, has recently expanded to Southern Arizona by acquiring the Eye Institute of Southern Arizona in Tucson and Green Valley.

The Eye Institute of Southern Arizona, opened in 1984, has been a leading business for eye care in Southern Arizona for a long time. Although the institute will now operate under the Southwestern Eye Center name, the same great service and respected quality will continue to shine through the company.

Jeffrey Katz, M.D., F.A.C.S. and Barry Kusman, M.D., F.A.C.S. will join the team as leading cataract surgeons in the Southern Arizona branches of Southwestern Eye Center. Whether you were a prior customer of The Eye Institute of Southern Arizona, or are in need of a new eye care center, the recently opened center is the place for you.

Established in 1982, Southwestern Eye Center was founded by L. Lothaire Bluth, M.D., with the sole purpose of providing the best possible care for patients in need of LASIK, cataract surgery, retinal surgery, cosmetic surgery, or glaucoma evaluations and treatment. Now, with 25 locations in Arizona and New Mexico, Southwestern Eye Center has shot to the top of eye care centers of its kind.

With friendly staff, respected surgeons, and quality care and services, the Southwestern Eye Center easily outshines its competition. The Tucson branch is conveniently located on Fifth Street between Craycroft Road and Wilmot Road.
