Ask me what I want my kids to be when they grow up and I won't hesitate with a reply. One word: happy. And to me, happiness is doing something that you love. Following your dreams. Being fearless. And going for it.

In all honesty, I hope my kids steer clear of anything crazy corporate. I don't want them working insanely long hours, being caught in rush hour traffic, and having limited time off. Instead, I hope they have an entrepreneurial fire- a passion to take a chance and succeed at working for themselves.

Kabbage, Inc. recently released data showing 85% of small business owners say being your own boss and owning a business is achieving the American Dream. A nearly identical 84% of more than 1,000 U.S. small business owners hope their children one day become small business owners.

When asked why they wish their children become business owners, the top responses included:

- Turning their passion into a career (38 percent)
- Being their own boss allows them to control their schedule (24 percent)
- Starting and building a company is rewarding (22 percent)

If you join these stats, here's something fun and free to gift your baby, instilling that "boss mentality" from birth. Kabbage is giving away "Future Small Business Owner" baby onesies to any parent in the United States- simply click here to get yours.
