From nourishing hand salves for first responders and electric scooters to accelerate food delivery from local restaurants, these Valley businesses are donating their goods to those who need it most.

Tempe-based Phat Scooter, a local manufacturer of electric scooters, has donated 10 PHLEET Delivery Ebikes to local restaurants during the COVID-19 shutdown (equally a donation of more than $30,000). Now that restaurants are turning to take-out and delivery options to keep their businesses afloat, the Ebikes increase delivery times by eliminating parking issues and minimizing traffic delays. The electric Ebikes can use bike lanes and provide faster delivery than a bike. VIG Arcadia, Chestnut Fine Foods & Provision, Postino Winecafe and Majerle's Grill are among the restaurants that received PHLEET Delivery Ebikes.

Though frequent hand-washing and sanitizing is necessary at these—and all—times to help prevent illness, the act can lead to extremely dry skin. To help ease this pain and irritation for Valley first responders and medical teams at several Valley hospitals, Queen Creek Olive Mill is donating

When the Chandler Chamber Ostrich Festival, slated to take place March 13 to March 15, had to be postponed at the last minute, it didn't just leave disappointed festival-goers. In an effort to put that food to good use, many of the food vendors--including Piggly's BBQ, Flaco's, Hebros Kitchen, Action Foods, Giovannis Concessions and Suck It Up--turned their disappointment and loss into blessings for others by donating their food to two food banks around the Valley. The first round of donations went to Azcend Community food bank in Chandler where the thousands of pounds of food was turned into 2,317 meals for people in need. The second round went to the Society of St. Vincent De Paul, totaling 2,000 pounds of fresh food.

Hopdoddy Burger Bar has launched a Pay It Forward campaign: For every burger purchased, Hopdoddy will donate one burger to healthcare professionals who are working diligently to fight the novel COVID-19 virus.
