EXTRA EXTRA!

Did Houston's changed the name to Hillstone so they do not have to disclose the calorie count? The new health care bill President Obama signed will require restaurants with at least 20 locations nationally to post calorie counts on menus, drive-through displays, and vending machines. Additional information about sodium levels, fat, and carbohydrates will have to be available upon request. Currently Hillstone has nine locations posted on their Web site. We contacted Hillstone for comment and no reply yet.
